Corbett Law Firm Announces New Practice Area

Patent Infringement Litigation

Dallas— For Immediate Release — The Corbett Law Firm is proud to announce that July 1, 2014, Attorney Augustus Corbett will begin accepting patent infringement litigation cases in the field of chemical sciences.

Augustus Corbett is uniquely qualified to practice in this area for two reasons. First, in law school he took several patent law and licensing classes to practice patent infringement litigation. However, he did not pursue this area of practice right after law school because he wanted to learn litigation first. Now that he has successfully litigated civil cases, the time is right to enter this area of practice.

The second reason Augustus Corbett is uniquely qualified to practice patent infringement litigation in the field of chemical sciences is his knowledge of chemistry. He started learning chemistry at North Carolina A&T State University when he earned a Bachelor of Science degree in chemistry. During college, Konica hired him as a chemical technician in its photographic paper division. Immediately after graduating from college, Halstead Industries hired him as a research chemist in their rubber division. Eventually, he left Halstead Industries and accepted a research chemist position at Lord Corporation in their electrorheological fluids division. In fact, it was a patent attorney friend at Lord Corporation that encouraged him to pursue a career in patent law. After leaving Lord Corporation, Mr. Corbett taught chemistry to high school students. Hence, chemistry is not Greek to him.

To serve his clients even better, Mr. Corbett will sit for the patent bar in the near future. He would love the opportunity to assist you with your patent infringement litigation case. Given his knowledge of chemistry and success in civil litigation, his firm may be perfect for your situation.
